ALISSA ANDERSON
CONTRALTO

CRITICAL ACCLAIM

Le nozze di Figaro – Utah Festival Opera

"Alissa Anderson, who plays Marcellina, finishes the triad of female strength in the show. While at first she seems antagonistic, she later gives her support to Figaro and Susanna. Marcellina is a stalwart and stubborn character, but once she accepts you into her heart she will fight tooth and nail for you. In a show of female solidarity, she speaks against her own son with an eye roll saying, "A woman must defend all women from men's oppression". -Front Row Reviewers

Into the Woods – Utah Festival Opera

"In terms of powerhouse vocal performances, Olivia Yokers and Alissa Anderson share the spotlight as Cinderella and the Wicked Witch respectively...Ms. Anderson uses the breathtaking range and strength of her operatic mezzo-soprano voice to blow the doors off the Eccles Theatre and nearly succeeds." -The Herald Journal

"Anderson played her own version of the Witch (and not a Bernadette Peters imitation). You see her love for Rapunzel, but you also see her vindictive nature bubble up from time to time. She is cynical and that leads to her be the prototypical over protective parent. Her "Children Will Listen" is part parental lament and warning to Baker as he raises his son."

-Front Row Reviewers Utah

"Alissa Anderson was especially fine as the witch"

-Deseret News

Il tritico – Opera Delaware

"All three Tabarro principals acted (and interacted) very credibly. . . Equipped with healthy chest voice, Alissa Anderson charmed the audience with Frugola's antics . . . Calenos and Anderson returned after intermission as the familial antagonists of Suor Angelica. Though both striking women, by force of character projection they seemed completely different beings than as Giorgietta and Frugola. . . Anderson, again favoring the contralto end of things, scored every possible point textually and in detailed stance and movement."

-Opera News

Tragedy of Carmen – Opera Birmingham

"three redeeming features make this production worthwhile. . . Second is the cast. . . Portraying a voluptuous Carmen, contralto Alissa Anderson sang the "Habanera" with power and passion as she searched for Don José, soon after presenting a more reflective "Seguidilla.""

-Artsbham.com

"The smoldering Alissa Anderson breathed life into Carmen, a gypsy "hostess" giving her unquenchable affection for the right price. Anderson provided a bellowing voice with sensuality. Her skilled seductions lead to danger when a soldier becomes lost in Carmen's raw attraction."

-Broadway World

Suor Angelica – Opera Company of Middlebury

"Contralto Alissa Anderson had great presence, vocally and physically, as La Principessa" -Rutland Herald

Le nozze di Figaro – North Carolina Opera

"Contralto Alissa Anderson was the rare Marcellina who was in no danger of retiring—or who sounded as though she should retire—before the end of the performance. In the hilarious Act One duet with Susanna, Anderson sang 'Via, resti servita, madama brillante' splendidly, the voice firm, focused, and filling the theatre with golden sound. Later, her entry with Bartolo and Basilio into the raucous ensemble of the Act Two finale had the force of a sudden tempest, her voicing of 'Voi Signor! che giusto siete' bursting forth like a thunderclap. Not even on the most acclaimed recordings of Le nozze di Figaro is Marcellina's 'Riconosci in questo amplesso una madre, amato figlio' in the Act Three sextet sung as well as Anderson sang it in Raleigh. Like Henderson's Basilio, Anderson's Marcellina was unfortunately deprived of her Act Four aria, 'Il capro e la capretta son sempre in amistà,' but the singer garnered a spontaneous ovation with her adrenalized vow to defend her sex by warning Susanna of looming peril. Even without the aria, Anderson was an extraordinarily enjoyable Marcellina, one who truly sang the role. Without a singer of Anderson's abilities in the part, how many audiences never fully appreciate how enchanting Marcellina's music can be?"

-Voix des Arts

"The cast was superb from the beginning to the end. . . Alissa Anderson sang a saucy Marcellina and was ideally matched with Hartmann's Bartolo for maximum comedic effect and Mozartian charm."
-Classical Voice North Carolina

Gianni Schicchi/Suor Angelica – Opera Santa Barbara

"The ensemble rose to the challenge of this fast-paced farce by displaying a seemingly effortless but no doubt hard-earned cohesion throughout the work's multiple shifts in mood. . . Alissa Anderson, as the Principessa, achieved an equal dignity even in an unsympathetic role, lending significant gravitas to the proceedings. The meeting of these two unstoppable forces—social censure and spiritual yearning—issued in transcendent music."
-Santa Barbara Independent

The Rake's Progress – Utah Opera

"Jill Grove and Alissa Anderson, as Baba the Turk and Mother Goose, added memorable vitality to their roles."
-Sara Neal, The Utah Review

Rigoletto – Opera in the Heights

"Mezzo-soprano Alissa Anderson brought an earthy voice and bearing to Maddalena, Sparfucile's sister and accomplice."
- Steven Brown, Houston Chronicle

"The supporting players were well limned, especially mezzo Alissa Anderson as earthy slut Maddalena. . . "
-D.L. Groover, Houston Press

Song Recital – Voces Intimae – Dallas, TX

"She delivered powerful vocalism, with a chest voice that many a baritone would be proud to own . . . "
- Scott Cantrell, Dallas Morning News

Falstaff – Opera in the Heights

"Mistress Quickly (mezzo Alissa Anderson, comically perfect) delivers the billets-doux to Falstaff with false flattery and a flash of ample bosom to snare him . . . "
- Houston Press Blogs

"Alissa Anderson's mezzo soprano instrument is on gorgeous display as she gracefully and proactively charms Falstaff and the audience alike . . . "
- BroadwayWorld.com

Lysistrata – Fort Worth Opera

"Ms. Anderson pranced about as an amazon-like general's wife and brought down the house with her Elmer Fudd accent."
- Pegasus News

"Mezzo soprano Alissa Anderson was frighteningly formidable as Lampito, the chief of the Spartan women. . . "
- Dallas Front Row

"The most inspired comic creation is Lampito, the leader of the Spartan women, who issues severe proclamations in an accent that combines Zsa Zsa Gabor and Elmer Fudd. She is played straight-facedly here by statuesque mezzo-soprano Alissa Anderson whose commanding presence only makes her pronouncements more risible." - Fort Worth Weekly

Albert Herring – Santa Fe Opera

"The cover Florence was on in place of Jill Grove – Texan Alissa Anderson was splendid in every respect...impeccably prepared"
- www.briandickie.typepad.com

Verdi Requiem – Bass Hall – Fort Worth, TX:

"Mezzo Alissa Anderson supplied aptly rich tones and an awesome chest voice"
- Scott Cantrell, Dallas Morning News

Die Zauberflöte – Sarasota Opera

"The three ladies were exceptionally strong . . . "
- Gayle Williams, Sarasota Herald Tribune

"Abla Lynn Hamza, Sarah Asmar, and Alissa Anderson were standouts as the Three Ladies."
- June LaBell, Longboat Key Observer

"Among the strongest performances were the Three Ladies of Abla Lynn Hamza, Sarah Asmar, and Alissa Anderson. . . "
- John Fleming, Opera News

"The three ladies were excellent!"
- Rex Hearn, Palm Beach Arts Paper

La Cenerentola – Fort Worth Opera

“powerful mezzo . . . deliciously over the top”

- Scott Cantrell, Opera News

Lucia di Lammermoor – Fort Worth Opera

“Even Lucia’s confidante Alisa gets sit-up-and-take-notice singing from mezzo Alissa Anderson.”

-Scott Cantrell, Dallas Morning News

“Alissa Anderson held her own in scenes with Futral. I’ve had a chance to see her perform at several other opera functions and not only does she have the power and ability in her voice, she exhibits grace and charm as well!”

- Steve Smith, West & Clear Blog/Pegasus News

La Cenerentola – Opera New Jersey:

“As embodied with towering zeal by soprano Rebecca Kier and mezzo Alissa Anderson, Cinderella’s evil stepsisters are wonderfully ridiculous creatures of vanity and entitlement, like Paris Hiltons in hoops skirts”

- Bradley Bamberger, The Star Ledger

“Alissa Anderson, who performed here last year in The Pirates of Penzance, and Rebecca Kier portray Tisbe and Clorinda with glittering voices and daring physicality worthy of Carol Burnett”

- Anita Donovan, The Times of Trenton

Amahl and the Night Visitors – Fort Worth Opera:

“As the mother, Alissa Anderson shone as bright as the star of Bethlehem, her gleaming tone and crisp vocal delivery a big delight of the show”

- Fort Worth Star Telegram
